

AIS eRobins Report
October 10, 2006

The AIS eRobins have been silent for several months. With the other internet websites available, they are not interested in the AIS eRobin website. The paper Robins have also been extremely slow. There are very few, somewhat active paper robins around that are being handled by their directors and without any input from the AIS Robin Chair. In years past, before the internet, the Robins were very active, but since then they have steadily gone downhill. People no longer want to take the time to write a letter and send it out via snail mail. I have tried to restart the Robin program, but generally no one wants to take part in this program any more. My question for all is: Does the AIS board want to continue having an official Robin program anymore?

Respectfully submitted,

Susan Boyce
Robins Chair
